TWO TINY YACHTS CHASE GAUNTLET

Lila and Tamerlane Will Try to Catch Rival Before Reaching Bermuda.

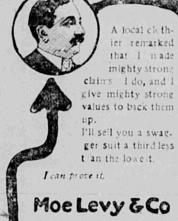

The little yachts Mla and Tamerlane Sandy Hook after starting on the ocean race to Bermuda, will probably start to-morrow morning to chase the Gauntlet. The Lila was towed up from Gravesend Bay to Tebo's Dock in South Brooklyn to-day. The stump of the most that broke off at the start of the race Saturday and caused the turning back of two contestants was removed and a new mast was shipped. It is expected that she will be ready to sall before dark.

The plan now in contemplation ar-ranges for the Lila and Tamerlune to all down to the Hook to-morrow morn ing and start together for Bermuda.
The little Gauntlet will have more than sixty hours o fa start by that time, but it is likely that the nasty weather has caused Skipper Robinson to put in somewhere because it is is not probable that he would want to take long chances with his wife aboard. Skipper and Owner Maler, of the Tamerlane expects if he gets away to-morrow morning to catch the little Gauntlet be fore she is sighted off St. David's

The Gauntlet was last reported Sat-

It has developed that the Gauntlet's skipper does not know that his boat is the only one left in the race. He undoubtedly did not see the yawl Lila's mast break off just outside the Hook, and the Tamerlane drop out of the race to render aid. In his eagerness to take every ad-In his eagerness to take every advantage of the wind, Robinson sent the Gauntlet off to the eastward just before the accident. A haze had set in and he stood over toward Coney Island before making his tack to sea. That was the last the other yachts aw of the little black racer, and undoubtedly the last Evbinson saw of them. He is a thorough sportsman and, although he will be entitled to the Lipton Cup if he reaches Bermuda h's friends say he would turn back if he knew he had no competitors.
